one the first delayer in the Piedmontese Parliament, rivalling attention by the rebelliousness of his views and the substantial soundness of his elucidations; and, considering his history for the subjects of his reasoning, and making himself formidable by his brilliant command of his repertoire—The Life of Count Cavour. From the French of M. Charles de Maugué.

THE HANDSOME COSTUME IN THE WORLD.

A number of persons were sent to Wack, the Piedmontese magistrate, asking him if the Wack costume could be devised that will be perfectly healthy and at the same time beautiful. He replied: "I have to make the same answer to you that I have to the women of Europe. The costume of the French woman is the handsomest upon the face of the earth. It consists of a corset, a short skirt, and a long and flowing hair. I have made this costume beautiful, and hung it up in Paris; but the women will never wear it. I can do nothing more. They must suffer until they are willing to adopt it."

ARAB CHIVALRY.

Those who lament the present miserable state of women in the East can hardly realize what was the condition of the Arab women in early times. The estimation in which women are held is the test of a nation's moral worth; and nowhere is this more plainly to be realized than in the East, where the degradation of the Arab women is the history of the down-fall of the race. In old times, the Arab woman was not merely reckoned her husband's equal; she was the object of chivalrous respect. A the old stories and traditions bear witness to this noble trait in the character of the warriors of early days. The heroism of the valorous harum-system of the Arab, and the conduct of the maiden of the desert was unfettered by the ruinous restrictions of the later Muslim life. She was free to choose her own husband, to bind him, to leave him, to divorce him, to marry again, to have no other—wise than herself; she might receive male visitors, strangers even, with he went to the mosque in the morning to practice noon prayer. The Jurist decided that it was impossible that a woman could be bought. Her husband treated her well with love only, but with reverence. It was who who inspired him to deeds of valour, and it was her praise that he most valued, when he returned triumphant. To protect his wives and the household, he had a body of Arab chiefs. The hero of desert-song thought himself happy to die in guarding some women from their pursuers. Wounded to death, Antar, halted alone in a narrow pass and bade the women press on to a place of safety. Planting his spear in the ground, he leaped on his horse, so that what the pursuers came up they knew not he was dead, and dared not approach within reach of his dreaded arm. As length the hero moved and the body fell to the ground, and the enemies saw that it was but the corpse of the hero that had held the pass. He died, as he lived, the one great deed of his life, as he lived, the one great deed of his life. Antar was due to the chivalry of his race the history of Arab Civilization. By Von Krenn

fore it was completed and opened, travellers to Dinan from St. Malo were put to the labour of climbing the steep ascent, whereas now they enter the town by a wide and easy road, which is a fine specimen of the new style of architecture adopted by the engineers. The town is surrounded by piers, which rise to the height of 150 feet above the river in whose bed it is sunk. Time was when the only entrance to Dinan on the St. Malo side, through the ruined Gothic gateway, was gained by the ribbe de Jorzal, rising so precipitously from the old bridge that foot passengers were in great danger of falling, and even the most careful had to exercise caution, especially in attempting the too facile descent. It is one of those hilly towns which afford a different view of themselves. But the most effective coup d'œil is certainly to be obtained by the favourite walk across the fields at the back of the Hospice des Invalides, on the slope of the hill, on the other side of the town, to the foot of the hill, on the eastern side of the valley. Thence may be seen, to the greatest advantage, not only Dinan's ancient towers and steeples, but characteristic traits of the Bretonne country—a land so strongly cut into mazes of labyrinth by its sunken, ditch-like moats, which seem to lead, by the most intricate and unexpected routes, to the defence of the besieging undisciplined body of Chouans and Vendéens, against the compact armaments of the Republic, is no great matter of marvel to those persons who have once seen the districts of the Breton peninsula spread before them.—From Pictorial Europe.

... long national movement
... by a rapid review of

influences employed to divert him from straightforward path. "Get rid of the situation" was the language addressed him by Marshal Radetzki just after his accession to the throne; "all will then be done" was the assurance given him. You will find in Austria your warmest friends," said the Emperor to the King of Modena and Parma. And the simple answer was, "I cannot; I must keep my eyes to my people." "Aboish the constitution," was urged in blind god faith by a large trim of the old Piedmontese aristocracy; the chief military men; and the counsellors were echoed in more or less convincing language by the Austrian military and political ultra-right wing. He stood firm. Then came the Sicardis, placing political and laymen on the same level of equality; and the storm rose higher and higher. To the Councils proposed the passing of laws which showed greater wisdom and more true political insight than any ministers could give. They did not, however, leave and worry them enough to render them innocuous. They were the language held by him to the Cabinet. The two chambers voted the bill; but royal assent was not yet given. It did not at the last moment be withheld. His old tutor, Bishop Haynau, said to him, "You have been a good son of the motherland influence which turned your heart to his march against Regency, can did not doctor Victor Emanuel from onward conquest against Pavia. Rome. This is to mark the wrath of Heaven against the pious few, who and not the wicked. All that is left is the hand of death, and at the same time." "It is too much for me to bear," he exclaimed, "I am weary of grief." "Wife, mother, brothers taken away, and the priests yelling in ears that it is the just punishment of sinners; and that I shall never escape from my need to Pavia," said he to the Emperor. "I will not," said the Emperor.
